How to get to Denmark by air [1]

Denmark is well serviced by airports, and most major airline operators have routes to and from the country. If you're looking to fly to Denmark, read on!

Copenhagen

Denmark has a number of airports, the biggest of which is Copenhagen Airport on the island of Zealand [2]. There are direct routes to Copenhagen from most major airports around the world, and most major airline operators have regular flights to and from Copenhagen. Copenhagen Airport is situated very close to the city centre, and you can get from the airport to the centre in about 15 minutes by metro [3]. There are also trains and buses [4] going to and from the city centre to the airport.
Note: Copenhagen Airport does not operate a shuttle service to and from the airport, but the Danish public transport system is very efficient and offers the quickest way from the airport to the centre.

Billund

Billund [5] is Denmark's second busiest airport. Located on the Jutland peninsula, it is close to both the LEGOLAND [6] and Lalandia in Billund [7] theme parks. A free shuttle bus service [8] is operating from Billund Airport to the nearby areas.

Aarhus

Aarhus Airport [9] is Denmark's 3rd busiest and is located on the outskirts of Aarhus [10], on the Jutland peninsula. Aarhus Airport is a good place to start when exploring the Danish North West.

Other Danish airports

There are also a number of smaller airports around Denmark, including Aalborg, Odense and Bornholm. Search here for a complete list of Danish airports. [11]
