Copenhagen is buzzing with life

The destination management company BDP captures the spirit of beekeeping and has signed a sponsorship with Copenhagen CityBee Association. The cooperation creates an unique opportunity for tourist and businesses to experience Copenhagen in a different way and learn about environment, business and society.

Copenhagen, June 2012:

BDP has signed a sponsorship with Copenhagen CityBee Association and adopted 140.000 bees at Carlsberg Brewery. Copenhagen CityBee Association is a non-profit organization, which has established an urban honey factory, where homeless and refugees take care of the three million bees. They provide education on nature and the environment and they are dedicated to making a lasting, inclusive contribution to a greener and more sustainable city. Hanne Nehmar, CEO at BDP is enthusiastic about the cooperation: "At BDP we give high priority to create arrangements relying on green and sustainable values. Partnering with Copenhagen CityBee Association gives BDP the opportunity to create educational and green tours for tourists and businesses visiting Copenhagen, where they can get insight into the honeybee's special world and learn about environment, business and society - and of course taste the city."

A green city:

The CityBee project is not the only green and sustainable initiative in Copenhagen. The capital city is a frontrunner when it comes to the environment. The city plans to become the world's first CO2 neutral capital by 2025. And from 2007-2011 Copenhagen was appointed to be the World's first Bike City by the International Cycling Union (UCI). The city also holds the world record when it comes to consumption of organic food products.
